As anticipated, the bank statement for this week makes a little better showing of the week's average reserves than that of the statement of last week. The specie reserve was increased $3,417,300, and the legal-tender average was increased $3,410,800; net gain of the total reserves, $476,500. But this result is due to the rising averages upon which the statement was made up...

difference was caused by remittances of country bank notes from the interior. But the theory of such a movement is inconsistent with shipments of legal-tenders and an expansion of the local circulation. Two weeks ago, in writing of the statement of October 1, we suggested that, as the increase in loans ($5,000,000) probably represents at least a portion of four per cent taken up by the banks, it does not necessarily affect the theory of the circulation.
